Distant Voices, Echoes in Time by Gregory

Native American Flute

Distant Voices, Echoes In Time is a collection of solo Native American flute improvisations. There are no other instruments, no sounds from nature, no chanting, no drumming... just the flute echoing off rock canyon walls and reminding us that at one time life was different, the inhabitants lead simpler lives, and nature and spirit were an ever-present aspect of those lives. If you will imagine for a moment, a young Indian boy from those times not so very long ago, sitting high up in a dwelling built from the surrounding stones of Mother Earth. He is contemplating the day before him, thinking of a young Indian girl he would like to impress... then he begins to play. The sound from the Lakota love flute resonates out, echoing off the canyon walls for all to hear. He knows that in his culture, the native flute and its sound is adored and appreciated by Indian girls old enough to take a partner, and his ability to play will help attract a mate. He draws inspiration from the sounds around him as he imitates the creatures of the forest, the birds... the coyotes that howl in night. He weaves the sounds around him into the melodies that come from inspiration, and from melodies taught to him by the tribal elders and those that have come before. He draws strength from the memory of his ancestors, and from the Great Spirit that oversees all things. Can you imagine hearing only this? Just the flute resounding in the wind as the trees sway to and fro, and the coyote makes his presence known. Come and let us help you remember those distant voices as they echo through the mind.... and through time. Welcome to Distant Voices, Echoes In Time.
